

Big Five Personality Test Results

Openness: 55%

Individuals with a score above 40 tend to be moderately open, appreciating new experiences while also valuing familiarity and structure.

Conscientiousness: 68%

Individuals scoring above 60 are still highly organized and responsible, with a strong work ethic and attention to detail. While they may not always be perfectionists, they are typically reliable and committed to their goals.

Extraversion: 56%

A score above 40 reflects a more balanced approach to social interaction. These individuals are neither excessively introverted nor extroverted and enjoy socializing in moderation. They may sometimes prefer quieter, more intimate settings but are capable of engaging in larger social events when needed.

Agreeableness: 57%

A score above 40 reflects a moderate level of agreeableness. These individuals may be cooperative but are also more likely to stand their ground when needed. They are willing to help others but may not always go out of their way to avoid conflict or prioritize others' needs over their own.

Neuroticism: 57%

A score above 40 indicates a moderate level of neuroticism. These individuals may experience negative emotions from time to time, but they generally cope well with stress and are more emotionally stable compared to those with higher scores. They may experience anxiety in stressful situations but can usually manage it.
