

Big Five Personality Test Results

Openness: 63%

Those scoring above 60 still exhibit a strong inclination toward learning and novelty but maintain a balance between practicality and curiosity.

Conscientiousness: 66%

Individuals scoring above 60 are still highly organized and responsible, with a strong work ethic and attention to detail. While they may not always be perfectionists, they are typically reliable and committed to their goals.

Extraversion: 64%

Individuals scoring above 60 are still social and energetic, but may occasionally enjoy time alone to recharge. They tend to engage in social activities and are comfortable in group settings but do not always require constant interaction to feel fulfilled.

Agreeableness: 63%

Individuals scoring above 60 are generally kind, helpful, and cooperative. They are considerate of others' feelings and try to avoid conflict, although they may occasionally assert their own views when necessary. They value positive relationships but can be more assertive when the situation calls for it.

Neuroticism: 57%

A score above 40 indicates a moderate level of neuroticism. These individuals may experience negative emotions from time to time, but they generally cope well with stress and are more emotionally stable compared to those with higher scores. They may experience anxiety in stressful situations but can usually manage it.
